Decolonizing Indigenous Migration: Violence, Settler Capitalism, Gender and Law

Presentations by Shannon Speed (Chickasaw), Professor of Gender Studies & Anthropology and Director of the American Indian Studies Center), Kristen Carpenter, Council Tree Professor of Law and Director of the American Indian Law Program at University of Colorado Law School, and Angela Riley (Potawatomi), Professor of Law and Director of Native Nations Law and Policy Center. How is the violence to which indigenous women migrants are subjected related to "neoliberal multiracialism" and settler structures of indigenous dispossession and elimination? And how might migration law consider the colonial origins and impacts that undergird state policies on territorial sovereignty and border regulation?
